AMERICA—Bruen (Henry, 63rd Regt.) A.L.s., 4 p. 4to, Halifax, 21st May, 1776, to Dear Sinclair, VERY INTERESTING, £4, 10s 650

"... I informed you fully in my last of the situation and circumstances attending the unfortunate Provinces of America, of the fruitless attempts of Administration to keep on good terms by negotiation with the People of this Country and the insignificant force sent afterwards to enforce their Laws, of the reception we met with at Boston, and the different proceedings to October last. Since which the Rebel Army kept us closely blockaded in Boston to the Landside till the 17th of March, when we were obliged to evacuate the Place. . . . We effected our retreat and embarkation without the loss of a man and set sail for this Place . . . make an attack on New York, where the Rebel Army principally is, and fortifying their Country . . . in the end we must prevail. There is a great change in the 63rd. . . . C. M'Pherson is Major of the new raised Highland Corps. . . . A most extraordinary change in the Army at large . . . loss of officers at Bunker's Hill. . . . Old officers who have services to plead are totally laid aside, and everything given to young men who can give the highest price for their Commissions," etc.

" . . . I have learned lately, by various cheering symptoms, that British Reviewing had as good as died a natural death, and the Lie lied itself out; that the most harmonious diapason from the united throat of universal British Criticism would hardly pay its own expenses. Rejoice, my dear Friend, that you can now sit apart from that distracted gulph of abominations; and pray for those that still swim for their life there. . . . I do not think you ever in your life saw such a solitude as this: the everlasting skies and the everlasting moors; the hum of the world all mute as Death, so distant is it. . . . As for myself, I think I have arrived at a kind of pause in my History, so singular is the course of things without me and within me. . . . I stand as if earnestly looking out, in the most labyrinthic country, till I catch the right track again. I have a kind of thought that I shall come and see London again, but when? Perhaps the sooner the better. . . .

AMERICA—Bruen (Henry, 63rd Regt.) A.L.s., 4 p. 4to, Halifax, 21st May, 1776, to Dear Sinclair, VERY INTERESTING, £4, 10s 650

"... I informed you fully in my last of the situation and circumstances attending the unfortunate Provinces of America, of the fruitless attempts of Administration to keep on good terms by negotiation with the People of this Country and the insignificant force sent afterwards to enforce their Laws, of the reception we met with at Boston, and the different proceedings to October last. Since which the Rebel Army kept us closely blockaded in Boston to the Landside till the 17th of March, when we were obliged to evacuate the Place. . . . We effected our retreat and embarkation without the loss of a man and set sail for this Place . . . make an attack on New York, where the Rebel Army principally is, and fortyfying their Country . . . in the end we must prevail. There is a great change in the 63rd. . . . C. M'Pherson is Major of the new raised Highland Corps. . . . A most extraordinary change in the Army at large . . . loss of officers at Bunker's Hill. . . . Old officers who have services to plead are totally laid aside, and everything given to young men who can give the highest price for their Commissions," etc.

"... I have learned lately, by various cheering symptoms, that British Reviewing had as good as died a natural death, and the Lie lied itself out; that the most harmonious diapason from the united throat of universal British Criticism would hardly pay its own expenses. Rejoice, my dear Friend, that you can now sit apart from that distracted gulph of abominations; and pray for those that still swim for their life there. ... I do not think you ever in your life saw such a solitude as this: the everlasting skies and the everlasting moors; the hum of the world all mute as Death, so distant is it. ... As for myself, I think I have arrived at a kind of pause in my History, so singular is the course of things without me and within me. ... I stand as if earnestly looking out, in the most labyrinthic country, till I catch the right track again. I have a kind of thought that I shall come and see London again, but when? Perhaps the sooner the better. ...
